SHOTOKAN KARATE

Karate Do – literally “the empty hand way,” is weaponless self-defense that includes punching, striking, kicking and blocking. Based on the most scientific use of all parts of the body, it produces power through development of the body as a balanced whole.

Not only is karate the most effective art of self-defense, but the physical and mental discipline used in training impart strength, conditioning, core strength, dexterity, coordination, poise and agility to students. Training also relieves stress and develops self-confidence, teaching students to channel mental energy in a positive manner. Students will also learn some Japanese vocabulary and culture associated with karate.

Under the guidance of Chief Instructor Carl Hartter, a sixth-degree black belt, classes are conducted in a safe and formal manner, stressing the courtesy and mutual respect.

KARATE INSTRUCTORS

The Shotokan Karate program at Four Seasons is administered by the Central Illinois Karate Association. The association is headed by Sensei Carl Hartter, a sixth-degree black belt with more than 42 years of experience, and a former national kumite (competition sparring) champion. He is a member of the American Shotokan karate Alliance Shihankai (council of masters) and a fellow of the International Karate Society.

The Shotokan Youth Karate program is under the guidance of Sensei Elayne Hartter. A fifth-degree black belt, Mrs. Hartter has more than 35 years of experience and is a certified elementary education teacher.

Rounding out the karate instructors at 4 seasons are Elston Flowers, Jim Stahly, Ed Chandler and Allison Kroesch. With more than 100 years of combined training, they bring extensive teaching experience to both the adult and youth programs.
